(Image credit: Laptop Mag) Knowing how to block a number on Android can help you dodge a spam caller or anyone you don't want to hear from at that moment. No matter which Android phone you use, this feature will be available in the phone app and it just takes a few taps to get a number on your block list. How to block a number on Android - Pixel, OnePlus, TCL The default phone app on most Android phones offers the fastest method for blocking numbers; it should take you just a few seconds to complete. (Image credit: Laptop Mag) Open the Phone app Find the number that you want to block and long press on it Tap Block/report spam Uncheck Report call as spam if this is just a person you want to block Select Block How to block a number on Android - Samsung Samsung uses its own phone app. It isn't quite as straightforward as the previous method, but it's really just one extra step so you'll still be done in seconds. (Image credit: Laptop Mag) Open the Phone app Find the number that you want to block and tap on it. Select the grey information icon, the furthest option to the right. Tap on Block in the lower-right corner. Tap Block again to confirm. That's it! You've successfully blocked whatever person or number was bothering you. If you want to unblock them in the future simply follow these instructions again and you will be given the option to unblock. Today's best Google Pixel 5a, Samsung Galaxy S20 FE and OnePlus 9 deals While it has got easier to keep in contact with people across the world, being able to block someone's number is also one of the fastest ways to shut off communication with them. And when it happens to you it can be a rather uncomfortable and potentially upsetting experience. But it can be difficult to tell if someone has blocked your number. So by exploring how you can tell whether that's happened, we hope to demystify some of the reasons why you suddenly might find your conversations being ignored. Do be aware that if you have been blocked it may be for a good, or bad reason, but it's best not to press the issue too hard as you risk breaching someone's privacy. See how fast you get to voicemail! If you call a person who's blocked your number, you won't get any kind of notification about it. However, the ringtone/voicemail pattern won't behave normally. When you call an unblocked number, you'll get somewhere between three and a dozen rings, then a voicemail prompt. Alternatively, if the person's phone is off, or if he or she is already on a call, you'll go directly to voicemail. A blocked number works a little differently. You'll get one ring, then go right to voicemail. You're free to leave a voicemail, although it won't go directly to the recipient's inbox. Instead, there's a separate location for voicemails from blocked numbers. (How you access it depends on what kind of phone you have, and it's not really relevant to this article.) Basically: If you get a lot of rings or go right to voicemail, you're probably not blocked. If you get one ring followed by a voicemail prompt, you probably are. One other thing to keep an ear out for: a prerecorded message that says the number is "unavailable." The exact message will vary depending on the recipient's wireless carrier, but if a number is unavailable — especially if other phones can reach it — your number is almost certainly blocked. Try sending a text message Text messages can provide some clues about whether or not a person has blocked you, although it's a more reliable method for iOS than it is for Android. On iOS, after you send a text, you'll usually get one of two notifications right underneath your message: "Delivered," or "Read." The former means that your text message went through, but the recipient hasn't read it yet. The latter is self-explanatory. However, if a person has blocked you, you won't see either notification. Instead, there will just be a blank space beneath your text. It's worth noting that being blocked is not the only reason why you might not see a notification. If a user has his or her phone on Do Not Disturb mode, you won't get any kind of notification until he or she turns that option off. However, if it's been a few days and you still don't see anything, you can consider blocking the most likely explanation. If you and/or your intended recipient have Android phones, though, the process is much less straightforward. Some Android phones have this functionality; some don't. Some message receipts work perfectly with iOS; some don't. If you've got an Android phone, your best bet is to just send a text and hope you get a response. Call from another phone Sometimes, the simplest solution really is the best one. If you think you've been blocked, try calling the person's number from another phone. Use your work phone, borrow a friend's phone; it doesn't really matter. The point is, if you can't reach a person on your phone, but can reach them on another phone, there's a good chance you've been blocked. Try this sequence: Pick a time when it's likely the person you're calling will be free. Call on your phone. See what happens. Then, call on another phone immediately thereafter. Remember: You don't need to actually reach the person; you just need to see how long it takes to go to voicemail. Best-case scenario: You'll be able to talk to the person and find out why they don't want to accept your calls. (If they hang up on you immediately, that's telling as well.) Worst-case scenario: You'll live forever with the mystery of whether or not you've been blocked. And yet, it's not the worst mystery in the world, when you get right down to it. Whether a person is screening your calls indefinitely or has blocked you outright, the end result is the same: They don't want to talk to you. Your best bet is usually to respect that, and maybe try again in a few months to see if things have calmed down. Avoid this We know it can be a nasty feeling knowing you've been blocked by someone, especially if you're not clear on the reasons why; in some cases it can be downright infuriating. But try not to let it get to you. And do try and resist the urge to pursue contacting the person who blocked you as that can be seen as a form of harassment. If you are feeling down about the situation, then try and find a friend to talk to about the situation or contact other means of support that's readily available. As of right now, Android is the most-used operating system in the world — rivaling Apple's iOS — with over 2.5 billion active users spanning over 190 countries. So if you're among the many Android users trying to figure out a way to block a phone number on your smartphone, we've got you covered. Whether you're a novice Android user or one of those few lucky users who hasn't had to consider blocking/reporting a certain phone number until now, this is one of the most common practices for the majority of smartphone users. Simply put, by blocking a phone number, you restrict the person (or AI bot) behind it from contacting you at all. This means that no calls and text messages will go through to your phone from a blocked sender. However, you can still contact a blocked phone number through a phone call and the recipient should be able to answer your call. Below, we've prepared a step-by-step guide on how to block a phone number on Android through both the Phone app and your Contacts list. Keep in mind that at the time of writing, we were using a Samsung Galaxy A20e. It's also worth noting that some screenshot elements were blurred/covered for privacy purposes. 1. First, locate and tap on the Phone app icon in the main menu. (Image credit: Samsung) 2. Next, tap on the three-dot icon, which should appear on the right-hand side of the screen. (Image credit: Samsung) 3. Go ahead and tap the Settings option in the drop-down menu as shown below. (Image credit: Samsung) 4. Next, select the "Block numbers" option. And if you're trying to protect yourself from spam, make sure to check our guide on how to block and report spam text messages for more guidance. (Image credit: Samsung) 5. At this stage, you can turn on a feature that blocks any unknown or private numbers by toggling the grey icon. To block a new number you can either: type in the number manually, select one from the "Recent" calls/text messages, or from your Contacts list. If you're doing the former, make sure to tap "Done" and "+" to finalize the process. (Image credit: Samsung) Congratulations! You're all done. You can remove a blocked number at any time by tapping the " " icon right next to it. (Image credit: Samsung) 1. First, locate and tap on the Contacts app from the main menu. (Image credit: Samsung) 2. Next, select a person that you'd like to block from your Contacts list. (Image credit: Samsung) 3. Go ahead and tap on the three-dot icon, which should appear on the bottom right part of your screen. (Image credit: Samsung) 4. Next, tap the "Block Contact" option in the drop-down menu. (Image credit: Samsung) 5. Almost there! Confirm your choice by tapping "Block" in the pop-up window. Got it? Alright, you're all done. You can remove a number from your blocked list at any time by tapping the three-dot icon and selecting "Unblock contact."
